About Riverbank

RiverBank is an outdoor lifestyle brand that translates the beauty of America's national parks into hand-drawn graphics and apparel. Born from a personal connection to the outdoors, the brand captures the scale, color, and stillness of the landscapes that inspired it — and brings them to life on clothing.

The project started after a trip to Yellowstone and Zion National Park. Standing in front of those landscapes — the layered canyon walls, the rivers cutting through valleys, the way light shifts across a mountain range — created an urge to capture that feeling through design. Brands like Nature Backs proved that nature-inspired graphics could live on apparel in a way that felt authentic, not generic. RiverBank set out to do the same, but with its own illustration style, color palette, and point of view.

Every design begins with a real place. The color palettes are pulled directly from the environments — the deep blues of alpine lakes, the warm tans of desert rock, the greens of dense pine forests. The goal is to represent nature's most striking moments in a modern, graphic way: simplified, layered, and bold enough to wear.

Exploration

The brand is rooted in real places and real experiences. Every illustration traces back to a specific national park, lake, or mountain range — not an imagined landscape, but one you can visit.

Illustration

Hand-drawn, layered, and distinctly handmade. The illustration style is what sets RiverBank apart — translating photorealistic landscapes into flat-color compositions with organic outlines and bold contrast.

Landscape

Nature is the subject, not the backdrop. The land comes first, the brand comes second. If a design doesn't make someone want to lace up their boots and go outside, it doesn't ship.

Primary Logo

The primary RiverBank logo is the mountain wordmark — the letters "RVRBNK" silhouetted within a hand-drawn mountain range. The peaks represent the Grand Tetons in Wyoming, one of the most iconic mountain skylines in the American West. This is the only mark that represents the brand. All other graphics are supporting elements.

Logo Variation

The primary logo works in black on light backgrounds. On dark backgrounds, the logo shifts to a lighter colorway — using Sky Blue or Cloud White for the mountain silhouette to maintain legibility. The color can adapt to the background, but the contrast must remain strong enough for the mountain detail and letterforms to read clearly at any size.

Wordmark

The RiverBank wordmark is set in Camera Obscura with a tightened kerning of -10, giving the letterforms a compact, grounded feel that mirrors the density of a mountain range. The wordmark can be rendered in any color combination that provides sufficient contrast against its background — black on light, white on dark, or brand palette colors on neutral tones.

A secondary version of the wordmark uses a gradient treatment inspired by coastal landscapes — blending ocean blues, forest greens, and sandy tans across the letterforms. This styled variant adds depth and visual interest for featured applications like packaging, hero graphics, and promotional materials.

Primary Palette

The RiverBank palette is drawn directly from the national parks and landscapes that inspire the brand. Soft blues, warm tans, and muted earth tones create an approachable, natural feel — while deeper values like Night Blue and Pine Green bring the ruggedness of the outdoors into the system. The palette is designed to feel calm and inviting without losing the weight and texture of the wild places it represents.

Secondary Colors

Mesa Orange and Pine Green round out the palette as accent colors. Pine Green represents the dense forests of the Pacific Northwest and Rocky Mountain valleys. Mesa Orange draws from the sun-baked rock formations of the desert Southwest — the sandstone arches, canyon walls, and mesa ridges of Utah and Arizona. These accents are used sparingly for highlights, calls-to-action, and moments where the brand needs warmth or energy against the cooler primary tones.

Brand Typefaces

The type system balances three distinct voices. Camera Obscura serves as the display face for the logo and headlines — its textured, hand-pressed letterforms feel modern but carry the weight of something made by hand. Journal OT Bold steps in for subheadings with a more rugged, hand-drawn quality that echoes the organic line work of the illustrations. Myriad Pro Semibold ties it all together as the body typeface — clean, neutral, and highly legible, giving the reader a smooth experience while the display and subheading fonts carry the brand's personality.

Illustration Style

RiverBank illustrations use a layered, flat-color technique built from overlapping bands of color that create depth without realistic rendering. Bright, contrasting tones sit side by side — deep ocean blues against sandy tans, vivid greens against warm sunset oranges — to capture the dramatic color relationships found in nature. The style is bold and graphic, reducing complex landscapes to their most essential shapes and colors while preserving the feeling of being there.

Emblems

The emblems are not logos — they are apparel-specific graphics designed for the fronts of shirts and hoodies. Each emblem distills a landscape into a compact, badge-shaped composition that pairs with a full back illustration to complete a garment design. Beyond apparel, the emblems function as standalone assets for stickers, enamel pins, patches, and digital applications like social media profile images and web icons.

Mockups

RiverBank was built for t-shirts and hoodies — but the brand's visual language extends naturally into the broader outdoor lifestyle space. The illustration style, color palette, and emblem system could scale into accessories, outerwear, camping goods, and any product that lives where nature meets design.

Inspired by Lake Powell in southern Utah, this graphic highlights the vibrant contrasting colors you can find throughout Utah.

Inspired by Jackson Lake in Northern Wyoming, this graphic draws from one of the most iconic album covers.

Conclusion

RiverBank is a personal project, but it was designed as a real brand. Every element — from the Grand Teton wordmark to the Lake Powell illustration to the emblem system — was built to scale. The visual language is flexible enough to grow into new parks, new illustrations, and new product categories while staying rooted in the same principle: let the landscape lead.
